Argentina Morning View

- IN A NUTSHELL: The primary deficit printed ARS203bn in January, the widest in real terms since the end of the Convertibilidad. A drop in export taxes, higher social security spending, and the trimming of energy arrears explain the deterioration. On the other hand, politics continued to deteriorate on both sides of the aisle, as the fabric of the leading coalitions seems increasingly stretched close to the breaking point.
- RATIONALE: The January primary deficit came at ARS203.9bn in January, up from ARS17bn in January 2022. At first sight, the print is worrying because January is seasonally a month when the Federal Government posts a primary surplus, and an ARS200bn deficit should belong in 4Q rather than in January. More importantly, an ARS200bn deficit in January implies a significant deviation from the 1Q primary gap PC, which is capped at ARS441.5bn. With about 50% of the target burnt, there's a narrow margin to accommodate the March seasonality, which includes an increase in social security spending along the pension indexation formula.

Still, the January print doesn't point to the government abandoning fiscal discipline. For starters, export taxes decelerated from +62%oy in 2022 to 41%oy in January 2023 due to the drought and a dismal wheat harvest that cut exportable grain by almost 80%oy. In this context, revenue dropped -3.3%oy in real terms. We expect the government to launch V3.0 of the Soy Dollar before the end of March, seeking to raise additional revenue. On the spending side, which increased +6.2%oy in real terms after shrinking -9.5%oy in 2H22, the story is less clear cut. The single most important driver of the acceleration was economic subsidies, which rebounded by +17.5%oy in real terms in January after dropping by -24%oy in 2H22. In our view, this is a positive development. A substantial part of the 2H22 consolidation came from accumulating energy arrears. Simply put, the government deferred payments to energy generators mostly during 3Q22, gaining some time until the tariff hike bit in 4Q22. With the tariff hike completed, we believe that the government used the benevolent January seasonality to reduce arrears. The rest of the spending print is more worrying. Social spending, which had dropped -7.7%oy in real terms during 2H22, rebounded +3.7%oy, transfers to provinces increased from -25.5%oy after inflation to +9.4%oy, and capex picked up almost 10pp in real terms. In other words, the government may be gearing towards an electorally motivated increase in fiscal impulse, which would be inconsistent with the IMF program's targets and would make the equilibrium in the ARS market more elusive, potentially bringing the ARS debt question back into the fray.

The risk of additional fiscal impulse becomes plausible when we take a look at the ghastly political picture of both coalitions over the past week. The FdT tried to stage a gesture of unity by getting the leaders of the different tribes at the same table and agreeing to a common strategy to face the election. It didn't turn out that way. Instead, the meeting left crystal clear that Peronism has a candidate problem. Mr. Fernandez, deeply unpopular and incapable of heading a competitive ticket, reasserted his intention to run, despite the pressures of the rest of the party to step down. Mr. Massa skirted the bullet in a context where the January inflation print weakened the prospects of his candidacy. Peronism rallied behind Mrs. Kirchner in this context, calling her to review her decision not to run, arguing that she remains the most competitive candidate. In other words, the meeting Mr. Fernandez designed to ensure his candidacy would remain alive until late May became a tour-de-force from CFK. Still, Mrs. Kirchner's centrality was short-lived. Mr. Fernandez counterattacked this week with a barrage of attacks from his loyal ministers (Mrs. Tolosa Paz, Mr. Cafiero, and the other Fernandez) against Kirchnerism and raised his profile with a message on national television. The increased tensions in the FdT resulted in the breaking of Mrs. Kirchner's Senate caucus last night. Four senators from provinces where JxC is expected to do very well, and Kirchnerism is polling extremely badly, decided to break with the caucus, pointing fingers at the national leadership (some question Mr. Fernandez's government, others Mrs. Kirchner's ill-timed campaign against the Supreme Court). Increasingly, there's a risk that an uncompetitive FdT might break up, making it almost impossible for the government to prevent an increase in fiscal impulse at the provincial and potentially the federal level, as Mr. Fernandez & co. attempt to backstop their deterioration in polls with spending.

On the other side of the aisle, the picture is not rosier. We've argued countless times that both coalitions were designed to oppose the other. A weakening in the fabric of the FdT reduces the incentives for a cohesive JxC. With the FdT coming apart, it is not surprising that troubles are brewing all across the board. In Mendoza, where former Governor Cornejo from the UCR is favored to win the primary, the Pro leader, Mr. De Marchi, threatens to run outside JxC, avoiding the primaries. In Cordoba, the dispute between Messers. Juez and De Lodredo is intensifying. Their row is especially worrisome, as both have a high profile nationally, and there are no mandatory primaries in Cordoba to resolve the dispute. And then we have the mother of all battles, the Horacio Rodriguez Larreta v. Patricia Bullrich dispute. Mr. Larreta, which most polls suggest remains the front-runner in the primary race, albeit commanding a tighter lead than a few months ago, launched his bid for the presidency last night. The announcement was preempted by a heavy barrage of criticism from Mrs. Bullrich, openly questioning Mr. Larreta's moderate stance. We expect the dispute between both Pro candidates to turn more uncivil in the coming weeks, in a context where Mrs. Bullrich needs to fight an asymmetric battle. Mrs. Bullrich's war chest is lagging Mr. Larreta's substantially, risking that she might step up the attacks to compensate for the risk that Mr. Larreta might outspend her.

This week, Mr. Macri and Mrs. Vidal also stepped into the light, writing their names down on the JxC candidate list, albeit in pencil. Increasingly, it would seem that Mr. Macri is happy with neither Mr. Larreta nor Mrs. Bullrich but would be partial to Mrs. Vidal running. Her strategy seems to remain a step behind the two leading candidates, safe from the shell-shocking, betting that if Mr. Larreta and Mrs. Bullrich inflict too much damage on each other in the coming months and their approval ratings deteriorate, she may have an opening to run as a consensus candidate by the June deadline. At the core of the JxC problem is that neither Mr. Larreta nor Mrs. Bullrich's strategy satisfies the different players in the coalition. Mrs. Bullrich's strategy is biased toward poaching votes from Mr. Milei. The shift towards the libertarian electorate clashes openly with Pro's partners in JxC. At the same time, Mrs. Bullrich's growth as a candidate seems to put Mr. Macri off, which explains why their relationship seems to have cooled off. Mr. Larreta's strategy, on the other hand, seems to rely on the UCR to get through the primaries but then pivot toward building something larger than JxC. Mr. Larreta's team insists that the only path to navigate through the many challenges besieging the next administration will be to have a consensus from 70% of the political spectrum, which necessarily requires bringing in part of Peronism, which raises suspicions from the rest of JxC, and especially from Mr. Macri.

All in all, we're seeing the fabric of both coalitions stretched close to their breaking point, making the coming months more uncertain. At this point, the FdT is short of a competitive candidate, and JxC has too many of them. While signs continue to point to a regime change, to what regime we're changing into and the path to that regime change looks increasingly less clear, making a consistent policy mix harder to attain.
