March 14, 2023

Argentina Morning View

- IN A NUTSHELL: The Government and the IMF staff reached an agreement over the EFF program's fourth review. Though the Government met or exceeded all of the end-December PCs, the staff agreed to a recalibration of the program in a context where the drought will make FX market dynamics more challenging, and the primary deficit could deviate from the target by almost three-quarters of a percentage point.
- RATIONALE: The IMF staff and the Government reached an agreement on the fourth review of the EFF program, unlocking SDR4bn in financing due before end-March. While the Government met or overperformed all end-December PCs, reaching an agreement was challenging. Since taking office in July 2022, Mr. Massa has committed to the program, finding policy solutions that made it possible to hit targets that seemed impossible under the divergent dynamics that marred the end of Mr. Guzman's tenure and Mrs. Batakis' brief stint in the Economy Ministry. Mr. Massa corrected a 1pp fiscal deviation in 2H23, overperforming the 2.5pp of GDP primary deficit target by over 10bp, wended down direct monetary financing, and managed to hit the NIR target by running subsequent differential FX facilities for soy exporters.

In other words, it wasn't the Government's performance that held up the review but rather the prospects of severe deviations from the program in the coming months. For starters, we expect the drought to shave about USD19bn from exports, more than what the Government can compensate for by tightening the energy deficit, increasing trade arrears, rigidifying the import compression framework, or securing a repo with international banks. As of now, to hit the existing NIR PC, the Government should add about USD3.5bn to net reserves in March's second fortnight. Since correcting a deviation of such a magnitude seems almost impossible, the staff agreed to flex the NIR targets. While yesterday's press release doesn't specify how much the target is getting diluted, media rumors suggest a USD2bn cut in 1Q23, which would persist throughout the year. In other words, the 1Q23 target would drop from a USD5.5bn accumulation relative to end-2021 to USD3.5bn and the end-year target from USD9.8bn to USD7.8bn.

A large part of the market took the IMF's willingness to recalibrate the program as a signal that, in an election year, the Fund is seeking to muddle through and prevent Argentina from falling into arrears until a new administration is in place. In other words, the program will not push the Government into a politically unpalatable macro correction as in 2022. We don't agree with that view. For starters, the market consensus is that reserves could drop by over USD7bn in 2023 on the back of the drop in grain exports, depleting the NIR position. A USD2bn easing in the target would not change the outlook significantly in this context. The Government would still have an uphill battle and potentially need to correct the REER to accumulate reserves and hit the restated target. And version 3 of the differentiated FX for soy exporters wouldn't change matters dramatically. The differentiated FX is the right instrument to compensate for farmers not selling. That was 2022's problem. In 2023, the problem is the lack of grain. When you don't have produce to sell, a tax cut to drive a price incentive won't change volumes significantly. In other words, the staff is nowhere close to flexing the NIR target enough to compensate for the deviation, much less to create some margin for slack.

The decision not to restate the fiscal target is an even stronger signal. With inflation running substantially hotter than the program's baseline, we still expect nominal deficit targets to be restated, following the precedent established by Mr. Guzman in 2Q23. Still, the real targets remain unchanged at 1.9% of GDP, despite the prospect of the drought shaving about 0.4pp of GDP in export tax revenues and the recently passed flex of the retirement qualifications adding 0.4pp to spending. While the Government could delay the regulation of the start of the flex regime for new pensions until 2024, and enlarging the differentiated FX for soy exporters could compensate for about half of the drop in revenue. Even then, the Government would still be facing a steep fiscal consolidation in a recessionary electoral year. Under our baseline scenario, GDP could drop around -4% 4Q/4Q in 2023, which would put the year in the red, despite the statistical carry from 2022. With Kirchnerism seeking to change the policy bias and add fiscal stimulus to regain electoral competitiveness, the IMF sticking its guns on the fiscal target is a strong signal, one that goes counter to the market's read about the review.

Ultimately, we believe the IMF's decision not to ease the fiscal target is right. With an extremely tight FX market, unanchored inflation, and refinancing woes, there is little margin for adding fiscal stimulus that can't be financed. The problem is that we remain unsure about the Government's continued commitment to the target, especially if it means tightening the policy bias to correct a deviation in the election year. Waivers might still be in our future in the coming reviews.
